Rise of Jude gives England hope

MATT DICKINSON

Doha: In an enormous Arabian tent, tears of World Cup defeat flowing in a desert, we were left with plenty of questions - has Harry Kane ever struck a penalty so wildly in his life? Will Gareth Southgate stay on? - but the continued elevation of Jude Bellingham was never in doubt.

As soon as minds can turn to the future — and this tournament inquest does not have to be long and fraught if the manager agrees to continue - plans can be made in the reassuring knowledge that England have young players to drive them forward with hope and one special talent, in particular.

In the composite England-France teams in the build-up to this World Cup quarter final, all inevitably featured Kylian Mbappé. That Bellingham also was a must-pick at 19 had already revealed that he must be a leading contender for the outstanding young player of the tournament.

Mbappé's sprint-duel against Kyle Walker was the razzle dazzle of this match but England know from so many big contests that midfield is where, all too often, the biggest games are resolved; that control of the ball is essential to survive when the air becomes rarified in the latter stages

On Saturday night, England had to grapple in that area with Antoine Griezmann whose reinvention as France's playmaking midfielder has shown that Didier Deschamps has more imagination as a coach than he did in his playing days as the famous water-carrier of the great French team.

Griezmann was the game's defining force; if not quite flawless then so close as seemed beyond quibbling. As France settled much quicker than England, it was Griezmann who took it upon himself to put the ball on the tee for Aurélien Tchouameni to strike from 26 metres. An Olivier Giroud header 12 minutes from time kept alive French hopes of becoming the first team in 60 years to retain the World Cup after a 2-1 win over England in the quarter-final clash.

"It's fabulous. It was a big game," Deschamps stated.

'We played a superb England team who are strong technically and physically. It's brilliant for the players to be in the last-four stage again. In these moments, you kind of wish time could stop for a while.

Southgate stands by team

Al Khor: England coach Ga reth Southgate cut a disconsolate figure after losing to France in the World Cup quarter final on Saturday but said he would not make any decision about his future in the heat of the moment.

"Whenever I finish these tournaments, you need time to make the correct decision. Emotionally, you're going through many different feel ings," Southgate told report-

"I would've preferred if we hadn't given England some gifts, but they were at a really high level."

Al Rayyan: In the tumult, in those minutes of unrestrained joy after Morocco became the first Arab team to reach the quarter finals of the World Cup, the players took a moment to come together after their famous victory and huddle for a photograph to capture the moment. Together on the turf where they had laboured for more than two hours to outlast Spain, cheering and smiling and with the throng of redclad Moroccan fans roaring behind them, the players and their coaches pressed together and waited as a flag was unfurled. It wasn't Morocco's flag.

Stretched out so it could be displayed in all its glory, was the Palestinian banner. Morocco, the best Arab team at the first Arab World Cup, had set off celebrations across North Africa and beyond with its win.

"Palestine is the 33rd country in the World Cup," said Abdullah Mansouri, a Moroccan fan trying to make himself heard above the horns and drums that accompanied his

Arab world, in all the Arab world. One of the features of the first World Cup to be played in the Muslim world has been the ubiquitous presence of the red, white, green and black colors of a team that is a member of Fifa but whose homeland is not a full member of the United Nations.

The tournament has offered a rare moment of Arab solidarity, with fans from different countries cheering on one another's teams and expressing support for the Palestinian cause — even as some Arab governments. including Morocco's, have recently normalized relations

That kind of normalization is not mirrored on the Arab street, as it is known, revealing a disconnect with the Arab leadership, and a sense that the Palestinian cause still resonates widely with people across the Arab world and the Arab diaspora.
